

Giving what you Need the Most
by Rev. Stephen Towles (August 16, 2009)

How can I give what I don't have,
When I don't have what I need to give?
Which certainly is a valid question,
When what we give is what we need to live.

Does it not make sense that if I give it away,
Then whatever it is I won't have at all?
But sending it away for a greater good,
Is like sending your daughter to the mall.

It absolutely will come back to you,
With more than there was before.
Because sending it out with an open heart,
Is a magnet that brings even more.

Why does it all have to make no sense,
Why do we need to go against the grain?
I think the intention is pure and clear,
Like the sky after a much needed rain.

We didn't come to create separation,
Separation is the human condition.
We came to affirm our oneness,
Which is the essence of the great commission.

When we use our creative gifts,
And trust in the illogical divine plan.
We then begin to see the real Truth,
Expressing love to our fellow man.

The greatest expression of love,
Is to give what little you possess.
Knowing that your good has arrived,
The moment you let go of the stress.

So perhaps it is all about Trust,
Which is really what we are giving.
And when we give it the magic begins,
And then we really start living.
